DODDRIDGE COUNTY, WV

History, Geography, Population

Doddridge County was created in 1845 from parts of Ritchie, Harrison and Lewis Counties. It was named after Phillip Doddridge, a distinguished statesman of Western Virginia. He spent the greater part of his life in Brooke County, West Virginia. Doddridge County was home to the late J.H. Diss DeBar, who designed the Great Seal and Coat of Arms. The county area is 322 square miles, 794 feet above sea level. According to the 2020 census, approximately 7,808 people currently reside in Doddridge County. The county seat is in the town of West Union. Located in North Central West Virginia, Doddridge County has friendly and helpful people, with one of the lowest crimes rates in the nation.

County Seat

The Circuit Court incorporated in West Union in 1881. The name was suggested by Nathan Davis, who owned the land upon which the town is now located. The town was established just across Middle Island Creek from Lewisport, which had some half-dozen residents. At the time an effort was being made to change the name of the settlement to Union; hence the name West Union.

Town of West Union

There is one municipality in Doddridge County. It has mayor-council form of government, with the mayor being the chief executive of the town and the official head of the municipal government. Town council consist of 5 members, 1 town recorder and 1 mayor.

County Commission

A three-member county commission governs the county. The voters elect commissioners to a six-year term at large. Annually, the members choose one of their members as president. The county commission has the primary budgetary and administrative responsibility for the operation of the county government. Working in cooperation with other elected officials, the county commission provides numerous services to citizens. The Doddridge County courthouse is located in the town of West Union. The local government is a member of the Region VI council, a six-county planning and development agency. There are approximately 24 county government employees in Doddridge County.
